

My wife's kind love - she hopes with me that you will always look upon Hardwick as a second home, and come whenever you please - and write to let us know, lest we might be going from home - with best thanks

Your affectionate & obliged old friend

J. W. Webb

You know I dare say how nicely DeLaRue has behaved about Witt's reflector at Oxford.

My dearest Arthur

How exceedingly kind of you to take all that trouble to make it all perfectly clear in which you have quite succeeded, tho' I still find the ail of want of familiarity with the act of working out - & it may be long before I shall come across the matter again.

We rejoice to know that you feel less the need of rest - but are sorry for its result - very sorry - in removing to a greater distance our prospect of a happy visit. Must it be really so? - If it must, remember you must pay us with compound interest before long. -

I got last night a letter from poor Frauds, who
- unless there is something behind unknown to me - seems to have been very shamefully used at B. House. It must have been either mistake or malice. The latter I know no reason for - the former I could understand, having
